

Living Safety

GlaxoSmithKline's

Worldwide Implementation

As a multi-national pharmaceutical company employing more than 99,000 people in 114 countries, GSK requires world-wide delivery of all major programs, and translation into many languages. The Keil Centre have recently completed the design and initial implementation of GSK's "Living Safety" EHS culture development programme. Living Safety aligns the behaviours and thinking style of managers, supervisors and other members of the workforce, including contractors, to support a strong EHS culture and excellent EHS performance. The chosen method of delivery was by training 150 local site facilitators from 25 countries at regional centres in Malaysia, India, Egypt, Mexico, Belgium, Poland, the UK and USA.

For more information about behaviour standards and safety culture development, please contact Ronny Lardner (ronny@keilcentre.co.uk).

Sion Edwards, GSK's EHS Director for Regional Pharmaceutical Supply said:

“ Living Safety simply articulates GSK's standards for working safely and clearly shows that every employee has a role to play. We see it as under-pinning all of our EHS risk management initiatives and it's proving a great way to engage and empower people across our operations. The Keil Centre has done a great job of setting us off on the right track. ”

Ronny Lardner of The Keil Centre won the British Psychological Society's 2008 Health and Well-Being Practitioner of the Year Award for a linked series of safety culture development programmes, which included GSK's Living Safety programme.

